Nobel Prize diplomas are unique works of art created by combining artistic talents from around Sweden. The design for each diploma is crafted specifically by the organizations awarding the prizes, resulting in distinct styles that showcase their vision. Each diploma's text follows a traditional format, written on parchment or handmade paper depending on its purpose. Notably, the diplomas feature intricate calligraphy and carefully placed names of those honored with the prize. Despite these differences, they all share an air of elegance and formality fitting for such prestigious awards. The Norwegian diploma for the Nobel Prize does not include a prize citation, in contrast to the diplomas from other countries which typically present the year's prize and a citation explaining why it was awarded. The physiology or medicine diploma is made of leather and is attached to the diploma. After preparation, the bookbinder mounts the diploma in a leather cover made of high-quality goatskin. The physics and chemistry diplomas are mounted in different colored leathers, while the physiology or medicine diploma has a gold medal in relief and calligraphic text. The diploma boxes are made of gray woven paperboard lined with pigskin suede. Gold monograms are also added to the outside of the diplomas for each laureate. The size of the Nobel Prize diploma is 23 x 35 cms. The Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences is responsible for the physics, chemistry, and economic sciences diplomas, which often feature an annual theme rather than a design referring to the individual laureates. Since 1988, these diplomas have been hand-lettered by calligrapher Annika Rücker. The physiology or medicine diploma is presented at Karolinska Institutet by the Nobel Assembly, with artistic decoration consisting of a gold medal in relief and a calligraphic text since 1990, which has been hand-lettered by calligrapher Susan Duvnäs. The designers of the literature and peace diplomas have only a few weeks to capture the essence of each laureate's work. The Swedish Academy handles literature diploma designs, often using unique themes related to each author. These artists must quickly summarize the authors' works or personal attributes. Since 2017, the literature diploma has included a gold medal in relief and calligraphic text. In 1986, Wole Soyinka became the first African to receive the Nobel Prize in Literature. His diploma reflects his work's rhythmic and liberating themes. The Norwegian Nobel Committee is responsible for peace prize diplomas, previously individually designed for each laureate until 1990. The creation of the Nobel Prize diplomas involves a team of skilled artists and calligraphers, including Marie Göyri who has been perfecting her craft for six years. This prestigious tradition dates back to 1901, with the diplomas playing a significant role in many remarkable stories throughout history.
